Audit Outsourcing

A quality management system can be quite challenging to implement in terms of staff mobilization, not to mention the investment it requires. However, the real challenge is not so much obtaining an accreditation from a standardization body but maintaining this accreditation.

It is therefore mandatory to conduct internal audits to maintain and improve the efficiency of a quality management system. For many companies, non-observance of their audit schedule stems from a lack of resources. As a result, internal audits are carried out in a rush only a few weeks before the external maintenance or recertification audit. The thoroughness and depth required for this exercise therefore become secondary concerns.

When faced with a situation like this, you can benefit from an external resource in the following way:

- Availability of a resource when required as per the audit schedule.
- Stability is provided by the resource, who becomes familiar with and follows-up on your quality management system. In time, this external resource comes to know and master your system and its history quite thoroughly.
- Identification and follow-up of appropriate corrective actions resulting from an objective and thorough review of your quality management system.
- Identification of improvement opportunities resulting from our experiences with various clients.
